Verbs are an important part of the English language. Jane dislikes humidity. She hates eating contests. Henry loves billiards. I have been there before. I am walking to the store. We are reading the book together. He will run for president. Explore six key verb types to further expand your knowledge of this all-important part of speech. (The state of being is feeling tired.) He prefers coffee. Verbs are the busybodies of sentences that serve to bring the entire thought to completion. Most verbs are action verbs. Action verbs can be either transitive or intransitive. to accept - She accepted the job offer. to ask - She asked to borrow a pencil. You can download the paper by clicking the button above. to sing - He sings in the choir. They describe a position or state of being; they have no duration, no beginning and no end. Various forms of the verb "to be" are linking verbs, including verbs like "am," "is," "are," and "were." There are many additional examples of linking verbs. In the sentence examples throughout this article, the subject is underlined and the verb is bold. Some verbs describe what action is being performed by the subject of the sentence. Now that you know what a verb is, it's time to show how many you know! Use the printable worksheet below to list at least one verb that starts with each letter of the alphabet. Most verbs provide key information about the subject of a sentence and are central to the sentence's predicate. They're more intangible than action verbs. Molly drove the car. Sam wants a bike. Aileen wrote a poem. Joshua ate the noodles. Sarah cleaned the kitchen. From there, learn how to identify verb mood in grammar. The only thing to note with this category of verbs is that they're always followed by a direct object, which is someone or something that's receiving the action of the verb. Loading Preview Sorry, preview is currently unavailable. There are many examples of action verbs. They describe a person can do or demonstrate. Without them, sentences wouldn't have any action. (The action is ironing) He drove to the mountains. For example, when you're playing Simon Says, Simon can ask you to do things like hop, skip, pat your head, or make a pair of moccasins. She feels tired. Rather, they connect the subject to the additional information that's about to come. Some words (such as smell, look or appear) can be used as linking verbs or action verbs. View & Download PDF Ready for a little fun now that you understand what a verb is? She ironed her dress. Then, when it's time to go beyond the basics, move on to discover the verb tenses. In the examples below, the helping verb is bold and italicized, while the linking verb is bold only. The car was here. We were exhausted after the trip. Some verbs can be either transitive or intransitive; the type depends on how the verb is used in a sentence. What is a verb? With transitive verbs, an object is required. Stative verbs are more difficult to identify as verbs. to bake - Elizabeth baked a carrot cake. They help. Sounds technical and tricky, right? Helping verbs do exactly what it seems like they should do. Linking verbs do not express action. Transitive verbs simply express an action. As the name indicates, these verbs describe actions. Try to use every type of verb at least once. Why not enjoy a few games? Instead, the action is being performed by the subject of the sentence. While they don't perform any action, notice that they're typically followed by a direct object, which is italicized in the examples below. (The action is driving) Some verbs describe the state of being of the subject. With these words, it's important to consider the function the verb is performing in the sentence in order to identify the type. They are used in cases where the linking verb on its own is not sufficient to form a complete thought or sentence.
